"High by the Blood of Christ."

BY PROF. A. M. HEND.

Far from God and hope of Heaven,

With our pilgrims, tread our way,

With our sins all unforgiven,

Far from light of heavenly day.

Far from Christ, the only Savior,

Far from holiness and peace,

Never thinking once of Jesus,

Who could make these wanderers cease.

But the eye of Jesus followed,

All our wanderings from his fold,

And his heart was fixed upon us,

Though our hearts were dead and cold.

And his voice we heard unheeded,

And his steps we saw, in vain,

Till his blood, upon us sprinkled,

Brought us to his fold again.

High to God and hope of Heaven,

Now we pilgrims tread our way,

Happy, with our sins forgiven,

In the light of Heavenly day.

Thanks we give and adoration,

For the Savior's precious blood,

May it keep us near each other,

And forever near to God.

Steubenville, September, 1885.

Take the Papers.

BY N. F. WILLIS.

Why don't you take the papers?

They're the life of my delight;

Except about election time,

And I read for spite.

Subscribes, you cannot lose a cent,

Why should you be afraid?

For cash this paid is money lent,

On interest four fold paid.

Go, then, and take the papers,

And pay to-day, not pay to-day.

And my word for it is inferred,

You'll live until you are gray.

An old neighbor of mine,

While dying with a cough,

Desired to hear the latest news,

While he was going off.

I took the paper and I read

Of some new pills in force;

He bought a box—and is he dead?

No—hearty as a horse.

I knew two men, as much alike,

As I can find in this world;

And no phrenologist could find

A difference in their bumps.

One takes the papers, and his life

Is happier than a king's;

His children all can read and write,

And talk of men and things.

The other took no paper, and

He died of a broken heart;

A tree fell on him and broke his crown,

And killed him; "very good."

Had he been reading of the news,

As home like neighbor Jim,

Would not have happened him.

Why don't you take the papers,

Nor from the printer's press,

Because you borrow of his boy

A paper every week.

For he who takes the papers,

And pays his bills when due,

Can live in peace to the end of his days,

And with the printer too.

MATRIMONIAL INFELICITIES.

HARRY GRAY'S NEW BOOK.

"Matrimonial Infelicities" is dedicated in

a graceful letter to the author's bachelor friend

Gifford, the artist, and can be had at a price of one cent. The few extracts which we give.

FRIDAY'S CLEANING.

Bridget, the housemaid, having entered the husband's study on household thoughts in and armed with broom and dust pan, is exercised as an intruder by the indignant

immature.

"Go!" I exclaimed, interrupting her and giving her my chair as I spoke.

She retreated precipitately, slamming the door behind her as she disappeared. I tripped to the door, turned the key in the

lock, and returned to my desk. "Now then,"

I said to myself, "I think that matter is satisfactorily settled. How curious it is,"

I continued, "that all womenfolk take such pleasure in sweeping. Now, if there be one thing I dislike more than another,

it is a broom. Brooms were invented by the devil, and it is a pity to try the patience of mankind." Then I returned to my writing.

Before five minutes elapsed, a knock at the door disturbed me.

"Who is there?" I asked.

"Mezelf it is," said the original Biddy.

"What do you want?" I inquired.

"The mistress bids me come back and sweep

the room."

"It is I, Biddy," I replied. "Go away."

"Will you let me in, sir?" she asked.

"No," I answered.

"Then I'll tell the mistress," she said.

For a few minutes I enjoyed comparative quiet; only my little boy, taking advantage of the door being shut, came in by the door, and, after a moment's play, he

tripped to the door, turned the key in the
